Learn about mental health in Native & Indigenous communities

Learn about Susan B. Anthony's ballot
AND MUCH MORE!
This month, we pay tribute to the rich ancestry and traditions of Native Americans, and recognize the unique experiences and issues facing Native and Indigenous communities today - including mental health.

Native/Indigenous people in America report experiencing serious psychological distress 2.5 times more than the general population over a month's time.

The suicide death rate for Native/Indigenous people in America between the ages of 15-19 is more than double that of non-Hispanic whites.

Native/Indigenous people in America start to use and abuse alcohol and other drugs at younger ages, and at higher rates, than all other ethnic groups.

The concept of mental illness & beliefs about why & how it develops have many different meanings & interpretations among Native/Indigenous people; physical complaints and psychological concerns are often not distinguished; Native/Indigenous people may express emotional distress in ways not consistent with standard diagnostic categories.

Due to high levels of poverty, many Native/Indigenous people in America face economic barriers that prevent them from receiving treatment.

Lack of awareness about mental health issues & services that are available and a lack of programs and providers that are sensitive to Native and Indigenous culture can prevent Native/Indigenous people from receiving treatment.

It is important to recognize these disparities and show support for the Native/Indigenous community in the realm of mental health and beyond. For more information on the above, as well as mental health resource for Native and Indigenous communities, click here.
On November 5, the suffragette and LGBT+ icon, along with 4 other women, casted ballots in the 1872 presidential race between Ulysses Grant and Horace Greeley, though it was technically illegal.

Born on February 15, 1820, Susan B. Anthony is widely regarded as the founder of the women's rights movement of the late 19th century.

Anthony was identified, arrested, and tried for "unlawful voting" in June of 1873.

“Becoming a music teacher has always been a career that excited me. Many of my role models have been my music teachers, and I aspire to embody their kindness, work ethic, and empathy in my future as a choir director. Singing in choir helped me form bonds with my closest friends, and I never tire of hearing the beautiful energy and sounds that are created when students work hard toward a common goal. This goal can be purely musical, related to the text of the piece, social justice, or anything else; music is a universal language that can take students places they never dreamed of going. I hope to make a meaningful impact on my future students in whatever way they need most, and show them that the music community is a place where they belong.”

Vivek has had a 30+ year career in technology and strategy roles dating back to his early days as a software engineer, leading to him founding a startup in the Washington DC area where he was the CTO and ultimately sold that company to AOL in 2000 for a positive exit. Since then, Vivek made a career as an Architect and Technology Leader at several Hartford-based insurance companies and most recently is the Founder and CEO of a startup called BeRemote LLC (https://www.beremote.com/). Vivek's focus at BeRemote has taken on multiple facets but in large part has been the focus on developing the two products and bringing them to market.

"Being right in the city was such an amazing experience. The dorms are just a short (and inexpensive) bus ride away from all the major attractions such as great restaurants, the beach, the park, and shopping centers. The beaches are astounding. They are the perfect place to spend your time after class or on Shabbat. After you hit the beach, you can walk a few blocks and find some of the best authentic Israeli food in the world on major streets such as Frishman and Dizengoff."
